

TRENDS IN SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY EDUCATION IN NIGERIA " PSYCHOLOGICAL BASIS FOR GENDER DIFFERENTIATION

FAGBEMI, O. M.

Abstract

Different studies have shown that girls achieve at a lower level than boys in science and technology oriented subjects; there are equally differentials in enrolment of females at various levels of educational institutions. This study examines the psychological basis for gender differentiation in enrolment in science and technology areas.

References

- Abdullahi, A. (1991). Inflating and deflating syndrome of Nigeria. Lecture. University of Ilorin, 12th December, 1996.
- Anastasi, A. (1976). Psychological Testing. New York: Macmillan.
- Berens, A.E. (1972). The socialization of achievement motives. New York University.