5.0 CONCLUSION

The institution of Hisbah has remained a veritable tool for the enforcement of Islamic law in an Islamic/Muslim state. However as a principle "al amur bil ma'ruf wa nahyu wal munkar" is an underlining reason for the compliance of Muslims in non-Islamic states to the direct dicta and ordinances of Allah fear of any enforcement agencies. Meanwhile, absolute compliance with the prescriptions of Islamic law and abstinence from its prohibitions fast track the realization of Maqasid Shari'ah.

The foregoing analysis revealed the important role of the institution in the facilitation of compliance with Islamic law in all the social, economic, political, and religious activities of every individual in the government. Therefore, the stability and peaceful co-existence which characterized the Islamic state in Madinah and some Muslim countries in the contemporary world; Saudi Arabia case study is unconnected with the efforts of Hisbah in the establishment of virtues and prohibitions.

The Maqasid Shari'ah which comprises of protection of religion, life, progeny, intellect and wealth remains a dream and needs a driver for its full implementation. There is no gainsaying in the fact that the institution of Hisbah has proven itself over the years as a veritable fulcrum to the realization of the objectives of Islamic law.

Vice, i.e. "Hisbah". To this effect, article 23 of the System reads:

The state protects the Islamic creed, applies Shari'ah, and enjoins what is right and wrong, and undertakes the call to the worship of Allah.²⁸

The above pronouncement culminated into the establishment of Committee for Virtue and Prevention of Vice, (CPVPCV). The hallmark of this committee is to invite to what is good and to refraining people from indulging in evil of any form. They protect the identity of Saudi society and are instrumental in field application of the principles of virtue and prevention of vice. The functions of the CPVPCV have been clearly defined to guide people and advise them on performing the irreligious duties as prescribed by Sharia and ensure that they are indeed performed; to forbid all that is reprehensible and ensure that unlawful acts are committed and no deviant habits or traditions are followed.²⁹

Essentially, the role of the committee in the social, economic and political stability is indicative of the fact that the institution of Hisbah is instrumental to the actualization of Islamic law (maqasid). It is instructive to restate that the Maqasid Shari'ah as discussed facilitate ease in personal and public affairs. In other words, benefits to the all and sundry of colour, race, ethnics, religion and gender which is the hall mark of Shari'ah tally with the Muhtasib. However, this goal, objective, aspiration and target is not an end in itself but through the mean of the institution and principles of Hisbah. By propagating virtue and preventing vice, the religious police have achieved three objectives which are of paramount importance in society and which every advanced society would aim at achieving. They are: continuity, cohesiveness.³⁰

A meticulous examination of the objectives of Hisbah using the CPVPCV in Saudi Arabia study, convincingly revealed the nexus between it and the objectives of Islamic law. The objective of Hisbah captured in the Saudi constitution includes but not limited to the following:

Article (9) of the CPVPCV Law states: "The most important duty of the CPVPCV is to advise them to adhere to the religious duties prescribed by the Islamic Shari'ah and to perform these duties while at the same time preventing vice and standing against corruption, forbidden and unlawful or following bad customs, traditions or reprehensible innovations."

Article (12) of the same law reads: "The Commission has the right to take part, with the relevant agencies, in monitoring forbidden items that affect beliefs, behaviours or general discipline."

An attempt to juxtapose the aforementioned objectives of the CPVPCV with the objectives of Islamic law (protection of faith, life, intellect, progeny and wealth) strengthened the paper that hisbah is a driving force, fulcrum and pilot of the Maqasid Shari'ah. Hence, the muhtasib is geared towards keeping alive the objective of Islamic law.

*them committed theft, they used to inflict the legal punishment on him. By 'Allah, if Fatima, daughter of Muhammad committed theft, Muhammad will cut off her hand!*²⁴

The above hadith further buttressed the risk attached to condoling evils and refraining from virtue. Hence, the social, economic and political status of the culprit should not blindfold the authority from establishing the ordinances of Allah. If the hallmark of Allah's ordinance is to establish virtues which has the potential of bringing forth benefit and preventing which on the other hand is capable of inviting agony and harm to the society, it is therefore sacrosanct that an institution like Hisbah is established and reinforced to carry out the duty towards realizing the objectives of Islamic law.

A painstaking review of the functions of the Hisbah Institution further accentuates its significance to any Islamic community in actualizing the Maqasid of Shari'ah. A cursory look at the role of the commission for the promotion of virtues and prevention of vices in Saudi Arabia which is a similitude of Hisbah police during the pristine Islamic age is imperative to the assertion that Hisbah is a driving force of Maqasid Shari'ah.

It is fact beyond controversy that Saudi Arabia is one of the most peaceful and fastest developing countries in the world. The security, tranquillity and internal stability in the most Muslims countries are incomparable with any other. This is without prejudice to the fact that there are few reported cases of crimes. Naturally, a community habituated by human being is not immunized from human error and crime commission. However, the level of crime perpetration and social unrest is minimized and bearable compared to other part of the country. Even during the existence of the prophet in Makkah there were reported cases of theft and adultery which resulted into the melting out of Hudud punishment on the culprits²⁵. This occurrence justifies the fact that mankind are fallible and irresistible from errors due to their inherent weaknesses.

Although, there seems to be no nation in the world that can be described as a full-fledged Islamic state due to one or two ingredients which characterized an Islamic state, nevertheless, the kingdom of Saudi Arabia can be described as one similar to an Islamic state because of some certain peculiarities. Saudi society bases its religion, ideology and daily practices on Islam and belief in Allah. Accordingly, the affairs of its life are interconnected with the rules of Islam. Moreover, Saudi Arabia is the only country in the world that applies the Shariah law of Allah and whose constitution is the Holy Qur'an.

There can be no doubt, therefore, that the Saudi system of governance derives its authority from Islamic legislation considering its features and form of administration.²⁷

In view of the great importance the state gives to "Hisbah", the Basic System of Government in Saudi Arabia (which was announced by Royal decree No. 90-A dated March 2, 1992) mentions explicitly that the state will take over the duty of propagating virtue and preventing commanding good and prevention underscores the uniqueness of the Muslim Ummah in the Qur'an;

You (true believers in Islamic monotheism, and real followers of Prophet Muhammad and his Sunnah) are the best of people ever raised up for mankind; you enjoin Al-ma'ruf (monotheism and all that Islam has ordained); and forbids them from Al-munkar (polytheism of all kinds and all that Islam has forbidden) and you believe in Allah...

Similarly, the prophet is reported to have enjoined the act of commanding virtue and prevention of evil according with one's capacity. The prophet said;

Whoever among you sees an act of wrong should change it with his hand. If he is unable, he should change it with his tongue. If he is not able to do so, then with his heart, and that is the limit of faith.²²

The above authorities pinpoint the exigencies of Hisbah institution in any Islamic society in the quest to realizing the objectives of Islamic law. Hence, the object of the institution is facilitating benefit and removing injuries in the society. The tentacle of Hisbah penetrates all aspects of human affairs. The tranquillity and peaceful cordiality that characterized the Islamic state of Madinah was not unconnected with the impacts of Hisbah which included supervision, prevention of social ills and indecency in the society. More lights will be shed on the nexus between Hisbah and the Maqasid Shari'ah subsequently.

4.0 A DRIVING FORCE OF THE MAQASID SHARI'AH

Prior to the advent of Islam, human society was characterized with extreme corruption, violence, rivalry and injustice. These societal ills are consequences of deliberate neglect of commanding good and prevention of evils. The nonchalant attitude of the society towards the curse and wrath pronounced on them, thus the reason for their predicaments. The prophet describing the cause of the predicament of the past generation thus;

Cursed were those who disbelieved among the children of Israel by the tongue of David and the Son of Mary. That was because they disobeyed (habitually) transgressed. They used to prevent one another from wrongdoing that they. How wretched was that which we were doing.²³

Similarly, the prophet warned in an authentic hadith against intercession crimes irrespective of the status of the culprits.

The Quraish people became very worried about the Makhzumiya lady who had committed adultery. She said, "Nobody can speak (in favour of the lady) to Allah's Messenger, and nobody dares to speak to Usama who is the favourite of Allah's Messenger." When Usama spoke to Allah's Messenger about that matter, Allah's Messenger said, "Do you intercede (with me) to violate one of the commands of Allah?" Then he got up and addressed the people, saying, "O people! The nations have become astray because if a noble person committed theft, they used to leave him, but if a weak

The foregoing analysis summarised Maqasid Shari'ah to include protection of faith, life, progeny and wealth. It is important to note that, protection of faith takes precedence over considering its influence on others. The importance of the maqasid Shari'ah is predicated on the essence of Shari'ah and stands as a compass of direction to all individual and corporate activities in the bid to attaining felicitation in this world and in the hereafter.

Meanwhile, Maqasid Shari'ah in relation to state administration exists as a philosophy which needs to be exhibited in the social, economic, political, religious and moral interactions amongst the people. In other words, the objectives of Shari'ah which underline the essence of Islamic law need an imperative compliance in every individual's and collectives' affairs. Hence, the establishment of the institution with the sacred mandate of protecting the Maqasid through the act of commanding good and preventing vices in the Muslim Community remains imperative.

3.0 CONCEPTUALIZATION AND FUNCTIONS OF HISBAH

The knowledge on Hisbah has received special attention from Islamic scholars by instigating discussions and thoughts about Hisbah in the form of academic articles. These academic works have been appreciated and responded to in the form of implementation. Hisbah is a horde of knowledge derived from an Islamic perspective and paradigm. Knowledge on Hisbah has been put in book form and has appeared in academic articles. Some of the discussions on this topic are found in literatures such as Hisbah fi al-Islam by Ibrahim Dasuqi al-Shihawi, Ahkam al-Sultaniyah by Imam al-Mawardi, Nawazil al-Rutba fi Talab al Hisbah by Ibn Bassam, Ma'alim fi al-Qurbah fi Ahkam al-Hisbah by Al-Ukhuwwah and numerous other classic works.¹⁸ Basically, Al-Juwaini opined that the whole of the Shari'ah principles are rooted from the duties of enjoining good and forbidding evil.¹⁹

The historical evolution of the institution of hisbah unarguably owes its roots in the divine ordinance of the Shar'iah. In other words, the primary sources of Islamic law are the basic foundation and pillars of the institution of Hisbah. Generally, it is believed that the principles of Hisbah are enshrined in the slogan "al-Amr bil-Ma'ruf wa al-Nahiy 'an al-Munkar (enjoining what is good and forbidding what is evil).

The term hisbah can also be derived from the root word hasaba, yahasibu, muhasabah, which in this case means self-evaluation.²⁰ Technically, Hisbah has been defined by both Che Ya'kob and Khan as the creation of an institution which would be responsible for commanding righteousness and restraining wickedness.

It is significant to note that the hallmark of Hisbah is basically enshrined as a fundamental duty of every individual and as a collective duty. As part of the religious duty of the Prophet, the duty was religiously carried out during his existence. The companions of the prophet; particularly during the reign of the rightly guided Caliphs, hisbah was institutionalized as a state responsibility. The life, and purposes at the level of luxuries are 'beautifying purposes' (tahsiniyyat), expression.¹⁴

Meanwhile, al-Ghazali wisely puts faith at the head of the list of maqasid because, from this perspective, faith is the most important ingredient for human well-being. It puts human life on a proper foundation, enabling human beings to interact with each other in a balanced and just manner to help ensure the well-being of all.¹⁵ The three goals in the middle (life, intellect, and posterity) relate to the human being himself, whose well-being is the primary objective of the maqasid. The direction that amoral commitment to the enrichment of these three can provide to the distribution of resources, cannot come from prices and markets alone in a secularist framework. The life, intellect and posterity of all human beings that are to be preserved and enriched, not just of the rich and the highly placed. Everything that is necessary for enriching these three is considered a 'need' and everything possible done to ensure its fulfilment - adequate nutrition, proper upbringing and education for spiritual and intellectual development, housing, and physical environment (with reduced tensions, crime and pollution), medical facilities, transport, enough leisure to meet all essential family and social obligations, and an opportunity for an honest living.

Ghazali places wealth at the end of the list because it is not an end in itself. It is only an important and indispensable one, for realizing human well-being. Wealth cannot be an objective unless it is allocated efficiently and distributed equitably. This requires, as a precondition, the satisfaction of certain moral criteria in the pursuit of wealth and the operation of a just political system. If wealth becomes an end in itself, it leads to inequities, imbalances and excesses, which ultimately reduce the well-being of most members of the present and future generations.¹⁶

Similarly, in the classical Islamic discourse on objectives (maqasid) and public benefit, there has been a discussion on how to strike a balance between spiritual good that lead to eternal happiness and Hereafter and earthly or material good. Al-Zarkashī prioritizes spiritual or religious interests, stating that "the fruit of the Hereafter is the eternal happiness to which nothing else can compare, pointing out that al-Rāzī and al-Shāfi'ī both affirm the same thing unequivocally". Because many material interests conflict with the interests of the soul, which appears to be the highest aim of the Sharia, interests that conflict with the highest aim acquire a secondary status. Al-Amidi thinks that all other objectives, like preservation of life, the faculty of reason and material wealth, are meant to further the highest aim of the attainment of eternal happiness. He writes,

Whatever is intended to preserve the root of religion should be given priority over all other objectives, including the preservation of human life, the faculty of reason, material wealth, and so on. These, if they are in the service of this overriding interest.¹⁷ purposes, intents, ends, principles behind the Islamic rulings.⁵ For a number of Islamic legal theories, it is an alternative expression to people's 'interests' (Masalih).⁶

Maqasid al Shari'ah, or the objectives of Shari'ah are designed to "promote benefits and remove harms."⁷ Nyazee mentions Imam Shatibi's view on the objectives as "... to free man from the grip of his own whims and fancy, so that he may be the servant of Allah by choice, as he is one with it."⁸ These objectives, though not expressed clearly, but are indicated in every law in the Shari'ah, and can be deduced from the benefits of fasting, Solat, Jihad, qisas and others.⁹

The field of the Islamic law, more often denoted as the higher objectives of Islamic law was developed to elucidate the deeper meanings, intentions and wisdom that underlines individual and social practices that are commanded and prohibited by Allah. Allah revealed the Scripture to guide people toward the well-being and righteousness which are the objective of Shari'ah.¹⁰ Thus, the Qur'an provides;

It is he who sent down upon His servant (Muhammad) verses of clear evidence that He may bring you out from darknesses into the light. And indeed Allah is to you Kind and Merciful.¹¹

The basis of the Shari'ah is wisdom and welfare of the people in this world as well as the Hereafter. This welfare lies in complete justice, mercy, well-being and wisdom. Anything devoid of justice, mercy, well-being and wisdom depict oppression, harshness, misery and corruption which has nothing to do with the Shari'ah.¹²

The very objective of the Shari'ah is to promote the welfare of the people which lies in safeguarding their faith, their life, their intellect, their posterity and their wealth. Whatever ensures the safeguarding of these five serves public interest and is desirable.¹³

Traditional classifications of maqasid divide them into three 'levels of necessity,' which are necessities (daruriyat), needs (hajjiyat), and luxuries (tahsiniyyat). Necessities are further classified into what 'preserves one's faith, soul, wealth, mind, and offspring.' Some usulist added 'the preservation of honour' to the above five widely popular necessities. These necessities were considered essential matters for human life itself. There is also a general agreement that the preservation of these necessities is the 'objective behind any revealed law.' Purposes at the level of needs are less essential for human

Mercy for the believers.¹ The Sunnah of the Prophet is another source of Islamic law complements, elaborates and expatiates the decree of Allah to facilitate ease and generality of mankind.

Al Maqasid Shari'ah simply means the objectives of Islamic law. Maqasid include the rulings, such as 'enhancing social welfare,' which is one of the wisdoms behind 'developing consciousness of God,' which is one of the wisdoms behind fasting and good ends that the laws aim to achieve by blocking, or opening, certain means. The 'preserving people's minds and souls' explain the total and strict Islamic ban on intoxicants. Maqasid are also the group of divine intents and moral concepts upon which Islamic law is based, such as, justice, human dignity, free will, magnanimity, facilitating cooperation.²

Meanwhile, Hisbah is a concept which connotes the act of promoting virtues and prohibiting wrongs through vocal persuasion and physical restraining mechanism. The duty of enforcing the prohibitions takes priority in the affairs of every Islamic state or community made by the constituted authority to establish a standing agency which is bearing the responsibility of discharging this duty (amr bil ma'ruf wa nahy an il munkar). Intervention of commanding good and prohibiting evil encapsulates the essence of Shari'ah and the objectives of Islamic law.

In the light of the above, the relationship between the principle of Hisbah and the objectives of Islamic law will be examined elaborately in this paper. There is no gain saying in saying that the realization of the objectives of Islamic law is a dream which an Islamic state or community seek to achieve through policies and programmes. One of the most effective establishments prominent in Islam is the institution of Hisbah. Hence, it is important to explore the impacts of Hisbah on the realization and sustainability of the objectives of Islamic law.

ABSTRACT

This paper examined the relationship between the institution of Hisbah and the objectives of law. The impact of Hisbah in the realization of the Maqasid of Shari'ah in an Islamic state is overemphasized, hence making it a driving force of the Maqasid Shari'ah. It was observed that implementation of Islamic principles, values and injunctions in relation to social, economic, moral and religious in private and public, mundane and spiritual affairs are not unconnected with the function of Hisbah institution. This paper is analytical and is based on the survey of relevant literatures. This paper thus asserts that the institution of Hisbah is a driving force for the realization of Maqasid Shari'ah. It was confirmed that the objectives of the institution are tailored towards the attainment of the primary goal of the Shari'ah.

Key words: Maqasid Shari'ah, Hisbah, Islamic law, driving force, virtues, vices etc.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Islamic state is unique in all essence and distinguishable from all other systems of government by its underlining characteristics, philosophy and objectives. Shari'ah itself is described as a path which guides mankind to prosperity and success in life and hereafter. Therefore, the Qur'an remains the fundamental and most essential source of Shari'ah as it contains the
